Three Lots Boy's Clothing #26

The Story

I always bought my son the most darling outfits. He was my firstborn and Gymboree was my favorite store. When he turned 1½, my brother and I were working on a book on Beanie Babies that would become a best seller on Amazon.com. We wrote The Book of Beanie Babies, which was a loose-leaf system to keep track of which Beanies you owned and which you wanted to acquire. It was a great idea and sold extremely well. Scholastic saw it and commissioned us to write a book for them. We got a healthy advance and wrote The Unauthorized Beanie Baby Guide for them. It was a lot of fun!

For a while, I had a lot of discretionary income to spend at Gymboree. I became well known there! And my son always looked like a million (or at least a hundred) bucks. It was great until Ty Inc. decided to sue anyone who had ever written an unauthorized book about Beanie Babies. I learned a lot from that experience—like never sign for a registered letter, especially when you are pregnant.

My wild spending spree on children's clothing had come to an end. What did I have to show for all of this? Boxes and boxes of really small clothes. When I started packing to move, I realized I needed to part with some of these darling outfits. I wanted a way to show them to their full potential so I went on eBay and bought a little child's mannequin for $13.

We put each outfit on the mannequin to photograph it. I can still hear my friends, Alexis and Brianne, oohing and aahing over how cute the outfits were! Selling by the lot is the best way to go as far as clothing sales are concerned. The most expensive lot that we sold is the one featured here. It brought in $37.25! The winning bidder also bought another lot for $26 and another for $35.89. Overall, she spent $99.14 on my son's outgrown clothes, and those were just three of the auctions that I put up. I had at least another 20 auctions with some of my daughter's clothing also! Amazing how much you can get for used kid's clothes. I dare you to try it!
